2. The Bullhorn Acacia of South America is one plant that can really take care of itself. Pairs of big, sharply pointed thorns grow all over it. They protect the plant against any large animal that wants to eat its leaves. But the big thorns do not stop some animals that are harmful to the plant. These are the leaf cutter ants. They cut leaves from plants and carry them away. They crawl over the leaves of the Bullhorn Acacia without being hurt.

The acacia has a surprise in store for many leaf cutters though. Its big thorns are hollow inside. Another kind of ant called the thorn ant, lives inside the thorns. This kind of ant will sting and kill all other ants it sees. The thorn ants go back and forth along the branches and leaves much of the time. Because they are on guard the plant usually stays safe.
