Hundreds of years ago, coins were made in various towns in Britain; but after 1810 there was only one Royal Mint, that was on Tower Hill, London. In 1968 a new mint was established at South Wales, for the manufacture of Britain's decimal currency which was introduced on 15th February 1971.

The metal ingots from which coins are made, are melted in closed crucibles for about two hours, and the molten metal is then run into moulds to form coinage-bars. These bars are next passed between rollers to ensure that they are of uniform size and then put into machines which punch out the blank discs on which the design has to be stamped. After being examined to see that they are of the correct size and shape, these blank discs are fed into annealing drums which soften the metal in preparation for the stamping process. The design is stamped by powerful presses and the finished coins are placed on a moving belt for inspection to detect any faults. The newly minted coins are tested for weight and are counted by an automatic machine, before being placed in sealed bags.
